HEAT EXHAUSTION AND HEAT STROKE TIPS

Heat Exhaustion

In hot and humid conditions, sweating can cause the body to gradually lose salt and water. This can result in a person becoming overheated and dehydrated. As heat exhaustion develops you may notice the following symptoms: headache, dizziness and confusion, loss of appetite and nausea, sweating, with pale and clammy skin, cramps in the arms, legs or abdomen and rapid, weakening pulse or breathing.

If you notice these symptoms, you can help the sufferer with some simple, straightforward actions.

1. Help them to a cool, shady place and get them to lie down. Raise and support their legs to improve blood flow to the brain.
  2. Give them plenty of water to sip. If you have isotonic drinks or oral rehydration sachets these will help to restore the body's salt levels.
  3. Monitor their vital signs (breathing and pulse).
- If their vital signs worsen, call 999 for emergency medical help.

Heatstroke

Heatstroke is a more serious condition that occurs when the body becomes dangerously over-heated. Heatstroke can develop with little warning and lead to unconsciousness within minutes of someone feeling unwell. If you suspect heatstroke, you may notice the following symptoms:

- headache, dizziness and discomfort
- restlessness and confusion
- hot, flushed and dry skin
- rapid deterioration in the level of response
- full, bounding pulse
- body temperature above 40 degrees Celsius.

If you notice any of these signs of heatstroke, you should not delay in carrying out the following actions.

1. Move the person to a cool, shaded place and remove outer layers of clothing. Call 999 for emergency medical help.
2. Help them to sit down and support them with cushions if possible.
3. Wrap them in a cold, damp sheet until their body temperature starts to fall. Keep the sheet wet by continually pouring cold water over it. If you don't have a sheet, you can sponge them with cold water or fan them to bring down their temperature.
4. When their body temperature starts to fall, replace the wet sheet with a dry one.

Monitor and record their vital signs while you are waiting for help to arrive. Also monitor their temperature and if it starts to rise, begin the cooling process again.
